The Great Image Has No Form or on the Nonobject Through Painting

the great image has no form or on the nonobject through painting is a phrase that invites us into a deep contemplation about the essence of art, the nature of perception, and the boundaries of representation. It challenges the traditional notions of what an image should be—a defined shape, a recognizable figure, or a tangible subject—and instead points towards the intangible, the formless, and the elusive qualities that painting can capture. In this exploration, we delve into how painting becomes a medium not just for depicting objects but for expressing the nonobject, the abstract, and the ineffable "great image" beyond form.

Understanding the Concept: The Great Image Has No Form

At its core, the idea that the great image has no form suggests that the most profound visual experiences in art transcend concrete shapes. This concept aligns closely with philosophies in Eastern art traditions, such as Zen Buddhism, where the emphasis lies on emptiness, void, and the space between forms. Rather than focusing on the external appearance, the viewer is invited to experience the essence or the spirit behind the image.

In Western art history, abstract expressionism echoes similar sentiments—artists like Mark Rothko or Jackson Pollock created works that reject representational form to evoke emotion, spirituality, or a sense of infinity. Here, the "great image" becomes a sensation or an energy field rather than a fixed visual narrative.

Painting Beyond Representation

When artists paint on the nonobject, they move beyond the traditional boundaries of figurative art. Instead of creating portraits, landscapes, or still lifes that depict something recognizable, they explore texture, color, light, and movement as means to communicate. This form of painting often involves:

- Abstract forms: Shapes that do not correspond to any real-world object but evoke feelings or concepts.
- Minimalism: Using simplicity and sparseness to highlight the essence of a subject or theme.
- Gestural brushwork: Expressive strokes that convey the artist's emotion and presence, rather than a physical form.

These approaches invite viewers to engage with the painting on a sensory and intuitive level, uncovering meaning through personal interpretation rather than literal understanding.

The Philosophy Behind the Nonobject in Painting

The nonobject is an intriguing philosophical idea in art. It implies a departure from tangible matter or defined subjects, emphasizing instead what cannot be concretely grasped. This aligns with metaphysical and spiritual explorations in art where the invisible or the “void” holds as much importance as the visible.

Zen and Taoist Influences

Many artists who embrace the concept that the great image has no form draw inspiration from Zen and Taoist philosophies. These traditions teach that true understanding comes from recognizing the emptiness that underlies all phenomena. In painting, this translates to an appreciation of negative space, simplicity, and the balance between presence and absence.

For example, traditional East Asian ink wash paintings often leave large areas of the canvas empty, inviting the viewer’s imagination to fill the void. This deliberate use of emptiness is not a lack but a powerful element that defines the whole composition.

Modern Abstract Art and the Nonobject

In the 20th century, the nonobject became a central theme in modern abstract art. Artists sought to break free from the constraints of realistic depiction to explore raw emotion, subconscious thought, and universal truths. The great image without form manifests in sprawling color fields, chaotic splatters, or precise geometric patterns—each representing something beyond the visible world.

Artists like Wassily Kandinsky theorized that colors and shapes could evoke spiritual vibrations, making the painting a conduit to a higher reality. This marked a shift from art as mere representation to art as an experience and a dialogue between artist and viewer.

Techniques for Painting the Great Image on the Nonobject

Creating an image that has no form requires a different mindset and technique compared to traditional painting. Here are some approaches artists use to embody the nonobject in their work:

Embracing Spontaneity and Intuition

Rather than planning every detail, painters often rely on spontaneous gestures and intuitive marks. This process allows the artwork to evolve organically, reflecting the artist's internal state rather than an external subject. Techniques like automatic painting or action painting emphasize this flow of creativity without conscious control.

Layering and Texture

To suggest depth without form, artists build layers of paint, glaze, or mixed media. Textures can evoke sensations—roughness might imply turmoil, smoothness may suggest calm. These tactile qualities engage the viewer's senses beyond sight, making the “great image” a multisensory encounter.

Playing with Light and Shadow

Even in abstract or formless work, light and shadow play crucial roles. Subtle gradations or stark contrasts can create illusions of space and movement, hinting at something beyond the canvas. This manipulation of visual elements helps to anchor the intangible within a perceptible frame.

Why the Great Image Has No Form Matters Today

In a world saturated with images—from social media to advertising—there is a growing hunger for art that transcends surface appearances. The great image has no form or on the nonobject through painting offers a refuge from the overload of explicit visuals. It invites contemplation, quietude, and a deeper connection with the self and the universe.

Encouraging Personal Interpretation

Without fixed forms, paintings become open-ended. Each viewer brings their own experiences, emotions, and thoughts into the encounter, creating a unique meaning. This democratization of interpretation is one of the great strengths of nonobject painting—it becomes a mirror reflecting inner worlds rather than a window onto external reality.

Inspiring Innovation in Contemporary Art

Contemporary artists continue to push the boundaries of what painting can be by exploring the nonobject. Digital art, mixed media, and experimental materials expand the possibilities for creating formless images that resonate on multiple levels.

Tips for Artists Exploring the Nonobject Through Painting

For artists intrigued by the concept that the great image has no form, here are some practical tips to explore this realm:

1. Focus on emotions and sensations: Begin your work by asking what feeling or atmosphere you want to evoke rather than what object to depict.
2. Experiment with materials: Use unconventional tools or textures—palette knives, sponges, or layering mediums—to break away from precise forms.
3. Practice mindfulness: Engage in meditation or quiet reflection before painting to connect with your inner state and let it guide your brush.
4. Embrace imperfection: Allow “mistakes” and randomness to shape your work; these often lead to unexpected beauty.
5. Observe nature’s abstractions: Notice patterns in clouds, water, or foliage where form dissolves into color and movement.

By integrating these approaches, artists can begin to capture the elusive essence of the nonobject and create images that resonate beyond form.

The journey into the great image that has no form or on the nonobject through painting is a profound invitation to see art not just as depiction but as experience. It challenges both creators and viewers to move beyond the surface and engage with the invisible currents that shape our perception and understanding. Whether through the subtle play of color, the rhythm of brushstrokes, or the embrace of emptiness, painting on the nonobject opens a doorway to a world where meaning is fluid, and beauty is boundless.

Frequently Asked Questions

What does 'the great image has no form' mean in the context of painting?

'The great image has no form' suggests that the most profound and impactful images transcend physical shapes and outlines, emphasizing the idea that true artistic expression goes beyond representational form to evoke deeper meanings or emotions.

How is the concept of 'nonobject' explored through painting?

In painting, the 'nonobject' refers to artworks that do not depict recognizable objects or figures but instead focus on abstract elements such as color, texture, and composition to convey meaning, allowing viewers to experience art beyond literal representation.

Who are some key artists associated with painting the 'great image has no form' or 'nonobject' themes?

Artists like Mark Rothko, Kazimir Malevich, and Agnes Martin are known for their exploration of abstract art and nonobjective painting, focusing on color fields, minimal forms, and spiritual or emotional expression beyond concrete imagery.

How does the philosophy behind 'the great image has no form' influence contemporary abstract painting?

This philosophy encourages artists to move past traditional figurative representation, embracing abstraction to explore concepts like emotion, spirituality, and the essence of perception, which has significantly shaped contemporary abstract painting practices.

Can a painting without a defined form still convey a powerful message or emotion?

Yes, paintings without defined forms often rely on color, texture, and composition to evoke emotions and ideas, enabling viewers to interpret the work personally and find meaning beyond literal depiction.

What techniques do painters use to create 'nonobject' works?

Painters use techniques such as color field application, layering, gestural brushstrokes, and minimalistic composition to create artworks that avoid depicting identifiable objects, focusing instead on abstract qualities and experiential impact.

How does the concept of 'the great image has no form' relate to Eastern philosophies in art?

This concept resonates with Eastern philosophies like Zen Buddhism, where emptiness and formlessness are valued; in art, it reflects the idea that true essence or enlightenment transcends physical form, encouraging artists to express the intangible through their work.

The Great Image Has No Form or On the Nonobject Through Painting: Exploring Abstract Essence in Visual Art

the great image has no form or on the nonobject through painting serves as a profound conceptual premise that challenges traditional perceptions of visual art. This phrase encapsulates a philosophical and aesthetic inquiry into the nature of imagery, form, and the intangible qualities that transcend concrete representation. Within the realm of painting, it prompts a reevaluation of what constitutes an image and how artists negotiate the tension between form and formlessness, presence and absence, objectivity and abstraction.

The exploration of the nonobject in painting—where the "great image" exists beyond conventional shapes or definitive outlines—opens a nuanced dialogue about abstraction and the essence of visual expression. This article investigates the implications of this concept in contemporary and historical painting practices, examines key artists and movements, and considers the theoretical frameworks that underpin the nonobject as a vital component of artistic innovation.

The Philosophical Foundations of “The Great Image Has No Form”

The statement “the great image has no form” suggests a paradox: an image, traditionally understood as a visual representation with defined boundaries, can simultaneously embody formlessness. This idea resonates deeply with Eastern philosophies such as Daoism and Zen Buddhism, where the ineffable and the void hold central importance. In these traditions, the absence of form does not signify emptiness but an infinite potentiality.

In painting, this translates into a deliberate departure from figurative representation toward abstraction or nonobjective art. The “nonobject” emerges as a concept that challenges the viewer’s reliance on recognizable shapes, encouraging a more intuitive, emotional, or spiritual engagement with the artwork. It emphasizes process, movement, and the materiality of paint itself rather than depicting specific subjects.

Historical Context: From Figurative to Abstract

The evolution from figurative to abstract painting in the early 20th century marks a critical juncture in embracing the nonobject. Movements such as Cubism, Futurism, and Abstract Expressionism progressively dismantled the illusion of three-dimensional form on a two-dimensional surface.

For example, Wassily Kandinsky, often regarded as the pioneer of abstract art, famously asserted that “color is a power which directly influences the soul.” His compositions eschewed recognizable objects, focusing instead on color, form, and composition to evoke emotional responses. Here, the “great image” is not a depiction but an experience that has no fixed form.

Similarly, Jackson Pollock’s drip paintings exemplify the nonobject through a dynamic, gestural application of paint that defies traditional form and perspective. Pollock’s canvases are celebrated not for representing objects but for capturing the energy and movement inherent in the act of painting itself.

Defining the Nonobject Through Painting

To understand how the great image manifests without form, it is essential to analyze the characteristics of the nonobject in painting:

- Absence of Representational Elements: The nonobject avoids identifiable figures, landscapes, or objects, focusing instead on abstract elements such as color fields, lines, and textures.
- Emphasis on Materiality: Paint, brushstrokes, and surface textures become primary subjects, highlighting the physicality of the medium.
- Open Interpretation: Without representational anchors, the viewer is invited to engage with the painting on a subjective level, deriving personal meaning from form, rhythm, and color.
- Spatial Ambiguity: The absence of traditional perspective or compositional hierarchy creates an ambiguous spatial field, often evoking a sense of infinity or void.

These features position the nonobject as a persistent theme across diverse styles, from minimalism’s reductive aesthetic to lyrical abstraction’s expressive freedom.

Comparative Analysis: Nonobject vs. Object in Painting

The distinction between object and nonobject in painting can be understood through their different artistic intentions and viewer experiences:

Aspect	Object-Based Painting	Nonobject-Based Painting
Subject Matter	Concrete, recognizable forms (figures, landscapes, still life)	Abstract forms, color fields, textures without identifiable subjects
Viewer Engagement	Interpretation based on depicted content	Interpretation based on emotional, sensory, or spiritual response
Purpose	Representation, storytelling, documentation	Expression of essence, exploration of form and materiality
Spatial Construction	Defined perspective and spatial relationships	Ambiguous, often infinite spatial fields

This comparison underscores how the great image, when liberated from form, offers a radically different mode of artistic communication—one that privileges experience over depiction.

Contemporary Applications and Implications

In today’s art world, the concept that “the great image has no form or on the nonobject through painting” continues to inspire artists pushing the boundaries of abstraction. Digital media, mixed media, and installation art have expanded the possibilities for nonobjective expression, yet painting remains a crucial medium for exploring these themes.

Innovative Techniques Enhancing the Nonobject

Modern painters experiment with techniques that emphasize formlessness and material presence:

- Layering and Transparency: Multiple translucent layers create depth without defined forms, inviting the viewer into a spatial ambiguity.
- Textural Exploration: Use of impasto, scraping, and unconventional tools accentuates the physicality of paint, making the medium itself the subject.
- Color Field Painting: Expanses of uniform or subtly modulated color evoke moods and atmospheres without relying on shapes or figures.

- Automatism and Chance: Techniques embracing spontaneity and randomness to break free from conscious control, highlighting the nonobject's dynamic nature.

These methods collectively contribute to a rich visual vocabulary where the great image emerges not from form but from the interplay of color, texture, and space.

Challenges and Critiques

Despite its conceptual richness, nonobjective painting faces ongoing debates within the art community. Critics often question its accessibility, arguing that the lack of recognizable imagery may alienate viewers accustomed to narrative or figurative art. Moreover, the emphasis on formlessness can sometimes be misconstrued as a lack of skill or intentionality.

Conversely, proponents highlight the liberating potential of the nonobject, which democratizes interpretation and expands the emotional range of painting. The ambiguity inherent in the great image without form fosters a deeply personal encounter, allowing for diverse readings and continuous discovery.

The Great Image and the Viewer's Experience

Ultimately, the power of “the great image has no form or on the nonobject through painting” lies in its invitation to rethink visual perception. When confronted with a painting devoid of clear form, viewers are compelled to engage differently—attuning to mood, rhythm, and subtle shifts in color or texture.

This shift can be transformative. It challenges the dominance of representational art, encouraging a more meditative or introspective mode of viewing. The nonobject becomes a mirror of the viewer's own subconscious, a space where meaning is generated through interaction rather than imposed by the artist.

In this sense, the great image transcends its physical boundaries. It becomes an event, a happening that defies capture in a fixed form yet remains profoundly present through the act of painting.

Through this lens, the intersection of formlessness and the nonobject in painting represents not a negation of image but an expansion of its possibilities. The great image, unbound by form, invites us to experience art in its purest essence—fluid, elusive, and infinitely resonant.

The Great Image Has No Form Or On The Nonobject Through Painting

the great image has no form or on the nonobject through painting: The Great Image Has No Form, Or On the Nonobject Through Painting François Jullien, 2009-12 In premodern China, painters used imagery not to mirror the world, but to evoke unfathomable experience. Considering this art alongside the philosophical traditions that inform it, this book explores the 'nonobject', a notion exemplified by paintings that do not seek to represent observable surroundings.

the great image has no form or on the nonobject through painting: The Bloomsbury Research Handbook of Chinese Aesthetics and Philosophy of Art Marcello Ghilardi, Hans-Georg Moeller, 2021-07-15 For anyone working in aesthetics interested in understanding the richness of the Chinese aesthetic tradition this handbook is the place to start. Comprised of general introductory overviews, critical reflections and contextual analysis, it covers everything from the origins of aesthetics in China to the role of aesthetics in philosophy today. Beginning in early China (1st millennium BCE), it traces the Chinese aesthetic tradition, exploring the import of the term aesthetics into Chinese thought via Japan around the end of the 19th century. It looks back to early practices of art and craftsmanship, showing how the history of Chinese thought provides a multitude of artefacts and texts that give rise to a wide range of aesthetic creations and notions. Introducing various perspectives on traditional arts in China, including painting, ceramics, calligraphy, poetry, music and theatre, it explores those aesthetic traditions not included in "canonic" art forms, such as martial arts, rock gardening, and ritual performance. Written by Chinese, European, and American theoreticians and practitioners, this authoritative research resource enhances contemporary aesthetics by revealing the possibilities of a Chinese philosophy of art.

the great image has no form or on the nonobject through painting: Human Beings and their Images Christoph Wulf, 2022-02-24 Bringing the image into dialogue with the imagination, mimesis and performativity, Christoph Wulf illuminates the historical, cultural and philosophical aspects of the relationship between images and human beings, looking both at its conceptual and physical manifestations. Wulf explores the cultural power of the image. He shows that images take root in our personal and collective imaginaries to determine how we feel, how we perceive the arts and culture, and how our bodies respond with physical actions, in games and dance to rituals and gesture. By showing how imagination occupies an essential place in our daily conduct, Wulf makes a significant contribution to how we think about the role of images in culture, the arts and society.

the great image has no form or on the nonobject through painting: Dimensions of Aesthetic Encounters Robert E. Innis, 2022-04-01 We encounter in our lives things and situations that elicit from us special forms of attention. They affect and inform us in various ways, drawing us in and holding us in their grasp or turning us away. Works of art of all sorts, and nature in its myriad manifestations, exemplify these luring and repelling qualities and potencies. Dimensions of Aesthetic Encounters explores central perceptual, interpretative, and semiotic dimensions of these encounters, combining a wide range of examples and intellectual resources from pragmatist, hermeneutical, and semiotic frameworks. Practicing a kind of method of rotation Robert E. Innis breaks down barriers in aesthetic theory and shows their complementary powers. Recurring themes link each chapter, throwing a powerful light on aesthetic encounters by foregrounding such pivotal notions as play, fundedness and the role of memory, the defining quality of an artwork, energies of objects, potencies, rhythm, form, presentational abstraction, medium, symbolization, intuition, role of the body, and the non-argumentative nature of art.

the great image has no form or on the nonobject through painting: Apophatic Paths from Europe to China William Franke, 2018-02-15 In Apophatic Paths from Europe to China, William Franke brings his original philosophy of the unsayable, previously developed from Western sources such as ancient Neoplatonism, medieval mysticism, and postmodern negative theology, into dialogue with Eastern traditions of thought. In particular, he compares the Daoist Way of Chinese wisdom with Western apophatic thought that likewise pivots on recognizing the nonexistent, the unthinkable, and the unsayable. Leveraging François Jullien's exegesis of the Chinese classics' challenge to rethink the very basis of life and consciousness, Franke proposes negative theology as an analogue to the Chinese model of thought, which has long been recognized for its special attunement to silence at the limits of language. Crucial to Franke's agenda is the endeavor to discern and renew the claim of universality, rethought and reconfigured within the predicament of philosophy today considered specifically as a cultural or, more exactly, intercultural predicament.

the great image has no form or on the nonobject through painting: Cosmopolitanism and Place Jessica Wahman, José M. Medina, John J. Stuhr, 2017-08-28 Addressing perspectives about who we are, the importance of place and home, and the many differences that still separate individuals, this volume reimagines cosmopolitanism in light of our differences, including the different places we all inhabit and the many places where we do not feel at home. Beginning with the two-part recognition that the world is a smaller place and that it is indeed many worlds, Cosmopolitanism and Place critically explores what it means to assert that all people are citizens of the world, everywhere in the world, as well as persons bounded by a universal and shared morality.

the great image has no form or on the nonobject through painting: Designing Boundaries in Early China Garret Pagenstecher Olberding, 2021-11-18 Ancient Chinese walls, such as the Great Wall of China, were not sovereign border lines. Instead, sovereign space was zonally exerted with monarchical powers expressed gradually over an area, based on possibilities for administrative action. The dynamically shifting, ritualized articulation of early Chinese sovereignty affects the interpretation of the spatial application of state force, including its cartographic representations. In Designing Boundaries in Early China, Garret Pagenstecher Olberding draws on a wide array of source materials concerning the territorialization of space to make a compelling case for how sovereign spaces were defined and regulated in this part of the ancient world. By considering the ways sovereignty extended itself across vast expanses in early China, Olberding informs our understanding of the ancient world and the nature of modern nation-states.

the great image has no form or on the nonobject through painting: François Jullien's Unexceptional Thought Arne De Boever, 2020-05-27 Although the French Hellenist and sinologist François Jullien has published more than thirty books, half of which have been translated into English, he remains much less known in the English-language world than many of his fellow "French philosophers". This may be due to his work being perceived as within the limits of sinology. This book attempts to rectify this, highlighting Jullien's work at the intersection of Chinese and Western thought and drawing out the "unthought" in both traditions of thinking. This unthought can be seen as what conditions our thought, and opens it up onto new ways of thinking and understanding. The notion of unthought is at the core of Jullien's methodology, operating in what he calls the divergence of the in-between. Written in an engaging style, Arne De Boever offers an accessible introduction to François Jullien's work that emphatically challenges some of the core assumptions of Western reasoning.

the great image has no form or on the nonobject through painting: Art as experience of the living body / L'art comme expérience du corps vivant Christine Vial Kayser, 2024-01-23 This book analyses the dynamic relationship between art and subjective consciousness, following a phenomenological, pragmatist and enactive approach. It brings out a new approach to the role of the body in art, not as a speculative object or symbolic material but as the living source of the imaginary. It contains theoretical contributions and case studies taken from various artistic practices (visual art, theatre, literature and music), Western and Eastern, the latter concerning China, India and Japan. These contributions allow us to nourish the debate on embodied cognition and aesthetics, using theory-philosophy, art history, neuroscience-and the authors' personal experience as artists or spectators. According to the Husserlian method of "reduction" and pragmatist introspection, they postulate that listening to bodily sensations-cramps, heartbeats, impulsive movements, eye orientation-can unravel the thread of subconscious experience, both active and affective, that emerge in the encounter between a subject and an artwork, an encounter which, following John Dewey, we deem to be a case study for life in general. Ce livre analyse la relation dynamique entre l'art et la conscience subjective, selon une approche phénoménologique, pragmatiste et enactive. Il vise à faire émerger une nouvelle approche du rôle du corps dans l'art, non pas comme objet spéculatif ou matériau symbolique, mais comme source vivante de l'imaginaire. Les contributions théoriques et les études de cas sont prises à diverses pratiques artistiques (arts visuels, théâtre, littérature et musique), occidentales et orientales, ces dernières concernant la Chine, l'Inde et le Japon. Selon la méthode husserlienne de « réduction », en écho à l'introspection pragmatiste, les textes témoignent que l'écoute des sensations corporelles - crampes, battements de cœur, mouvements pulsionnels, orientation des yeux - mises en jeu par l'œuvre, permet de dénouer le fil de l'expérience inconsciente, à la fois kinesthésique et affective, qui émerge dans la rencontre entre un sujet et une œuvre d'art, une rencontre comprise, à la manière de Dewey, comme un cas d'école de la vie en général.

the great image has no form or on the nonobject through painting: Art and Design Peter Stupples, Jane Venis, 2018-01-23 This book is a selection of essays covering aspects of the history, and contemporary understanding of the fields of art and design and their inter-percolation. Making things has always involved skill and thought. Thought is given to their creation so they are fit for purpose. Where the purpose is aesthetic or intellectual pleasure, the resulting object is often called art. There is, however, often a hierarchy placing "art" somewhere apart from "design." But isn't some art designed? These essays investigate aspects of this dichotomy - from both sides of the supposed divide to discuss the ground between.

the great image has no form or on the nonobject through painting: Girl with Dead Bird Volkmar Mühleis, 2018-03-16 Life and death in a sixteenth-century masterpiece The portrait we have come to call Little Girl with Dead Bird is an enigma. On the one hand, we hardly know anything about this sixteenth-century masterpiece. But even so, on the other hand, the picture fascinates viewers to this day. This painting's indeterminate yet compelling status provides Volkmar Mühleis grounds to look beyond its historical significance and to explore its anthropological scope as well, from an intercultural perspective and, moreover, against the backdrop of its complex of themes concerning life and death. To do so, Mühleis returns to the conceptual premises that frame the relationship between the history of art and the anthropology of images, along with those that juxtapose Western and Eastern philosophies.

the great image has no form or on the nonobject through painting: Songs of Nature

John Sallis, 2020-02-04 This latest philosophical text by John Sallis is inspired by the work of contemporary Chinese painter Cao Jun. It carries out a series of philosophical reflections on nature, art, and music by taking up Cao Jun's art and thought, with a focus on questions of the elemental. Sallis's reflections are not a matter of simply relating art works to philosophical thought, as theoretical insights and developments run throughout Cao Jun's writings and inform many of his artistic works. Sallis maintains abundant points of contact with Chinese philosophical traditions but also with Western philosophy. In these reflections on art, Sallis poses a critique of mimesis and considers the relation of painting to music. He affirms his conviction that the artist must always turn to nature, especially as reflections on the earth and sky delimit the scale and place of what is human. Full-color illustrations enhance this provocative and penetrating text.

the great image has no form or on the nonobject through painting: Semiotics for Art History Lian Duan, 2018-12-02 Reading art from a semiotic perspective, this book offers a new interpretation of the development of Chinese landscape painting and outlines a new framework for contemporary semiotics and critical theory. It will appeal to those interested in visual art, Chinese studies, critical theory, semiotics, and other relevant fields, and will allow the reader to learn how to put theory into the practice of studying art, how to give new life to an important theory, and how to acquire a new point of view in appreciating and enjoying art with a certain critical theory.

the great image has no form or on the nonobject through painting: The Exercise of the Spatial Imagination in Pre-Modern China Garret Pagenstecher Olberding, 2022-02-07 This volume is distinctive for its extraordinarily interdisciplinary investigations into a little discussed topic, the spatial imagination. It probes the exercise of the spatial imagination in pre-modern China across five general areas: pictorial representation, literary description, cartographic mappings, and the intertwining of heavenly and earthly space. It recommends that the spatial imagination in the pre-modern world cannot adequately be captured using a linear, militarily framed conceptualization. The scope and varying perspectives on the spatial imagination analyzed in the volume's essays reveal a complex range of aspects that informs how space was designed and utilized. Due to the complexity and advanced scholarly level of the papers, the primary readership will be other scholars and advanced graduate students in history, history of science, geography, art history, religious studies, literature, and, broadly, sinology.

the great image has no form or on the nonobject through painting: Thinking the Sculpture Garden Penny Florence, 2020-02-20 This innovative book poses two, deceptively simple, questions: what is a sculpture garden, and what happens when you give equal weight to the main elements of landscape, planting and artwork? Its wide-ranging frame of reference, including the USA, Europe and Japan, is brought into focus through Tremenhoe Sculpture Garden, Cornwall, with which the book begins and ends. Effectively less than 15 years old, and largely the work of one man, Tremmenheere affords an opportunity to examine as work-in-progress the creation of a new kind of sculpture garden. Including a historical overview, the book traverses multiple ways of seeing and experiencing sculpture gardens, culminating in an exploration of their relevance as 'cultural ecology' in the context of globalisation, urbanisation and climate change. The thinking here is non-dualist and broadly aligned with New Materialisms and Material Feminisms to explore our place as humans in the non-human world on which we depend. Eminent contributors, including John Dixon Hunt, George Descombes, Bernard Lassus and David Leatherbarrow, approach these issues through practices and theories of landscape architecture; garden and art making; history and writing; and philosophy. Richly illustrated with over 100 images, including a colour plate section, the book will primarily appeal to those engaged in professional or academic research, along with sculpture garden visitors, who will find new and surprising ways of experiencing plants and art in natural and urban settings.
